(Anonymous) Lecture Evaluation Form

--- fold page in middle so as to cover everything below this line ---

Dror's word: I've given hundreds of talks and attended thousands, and never, at least hardly ever, I got an honest opinion about my talks or felt comfortable giving my honest opinion about somebody else's. We are all afraid to speak; we don't want to offend anybody and we don't want to expose our ignorance. Yet how much we need feedback. How much I need it to make my own talks better, how much I wish other people's talks were better too! The solution is right in front of you – the (anonymous) lecture evaluation forms. With the agreement of the speaker it is up to the organizer to distribute these, collect them, shuffle them, and hand them to speaker.

So for the sake of quality and the joy of hearing mathematics, please answer the following questions.

The most important question – please answer at least this one! Did you, or when did you, stop following the lecture?

Say something about yourself – your background, academic age, etc. If you wish to reveal your name, you are welcome, but it is not necessary.

Did you understand the motivation for this talk? Did you find the cause worthy of the effort?

Did you follow the overall plan?

How did the details go?

How did the talk go, overall? What could I (the speaker) have done to make it better (for you)?
